Chip vendors Qualcomm and Nvidia have launched their support behind the Windows 7 OPERATING SYSTEM for notebooks, announcing efforts to bring better graphics and continuous 3G connectivity to devices. Qualcomm announced on Wednesday that it was showing chips that allow windows 7 netbook connectivity to multiple 3G networks. Separately, Nvidia announced beta drivers for its netbook platform that could bring full high definition video to Windows 7. Qualcomm said it has upgraded its Gobi2000 3G embedded chip, designed to allow netbooks and laptops to access multiple 3G networks such as HSPA (High-Speed Packet Access) EV-DO (Evolution-Data Optimized). The chip supports Windows 7 and improves data speeds and frequencies at which devices can connect to 3G networks. The method is in sampling and should arrive and laptops in the second half of this year, Qualcomm said. We think that Gobi notebook and netbook customers will experience the desire for ubiquitous connectivity, said Gary Greenbaum, director of business development at Windows Networking at Microsoft, in a statement. Separately, graphics salesman Nvidia on Wednesday said it has released beta pilots that make its Ion netbook platform compatible with Windows 7. prior it could bring all the capabilities of high-definition 1080p video to Windows 7. It could also enable better multimedia capabilities such as photo editing and gaming than what you normally find in netbooks. We have not beta drivers for Windows 7 for our customers so that they start designing/developing Ion-based systems now, prior, Ken Brown, an Nvidia spokesman, said in an email. Nvidia and Microsoft demonstrated several applications running on the Ion network with Windows 7 at an event in Taiwan on Wednesday. Staff showed 1080p HD video while simultaneously transcoding another HD video. Nvidia has not commented on details related to the driver. Microsoft did not immediately respond to requests for comments. Graphics seller Nvidia is trying to get a share of the emerging netbook market with Ion. There aren't any network-based netbooks yet, but Nvidia says it's working with computer makers to bring turns the mini-notebooks. In extending Windows 7 drivers earlier, Nvidia is trying to convince PC manufacturers to adopt the Ion platform over rivals like Intel, said Jon Peddie, president of market research firm Jon Peddie Research. The initial jump of the company-.80% in extend I am also showing your seriousness when entering the netbook space. The Ion Platform Pairs Nvidia's. Ahem, with the Intel Atom CPU, GeForce 9400M GPU. Nvidia claims that Ion gives better graphics for netbooks while drawing less This benefits netbook buyers that get more powerful graphics to a lower price, said Peddie. However, Intel's employees argue that battery life and small-shaped netbook factor are not designed to run high definition movies, which are most suitable for major laptops. Intel has recently begun to send the Atom N280 processor and the GN40 chipset that can decode the 720p Vine. Using the Intel Atom Netbook processor, the Ion platform can make an insignificant netbook in a Hahahan Honest-to-God Notebook pocket book, Mendez Peddie said. A game developer has launched an open code interpretation from the Classic Microsoft Viveo game, Chipping Sheches Challenge, in Windows Store as a Universal Windows Platform application. Herevet involves the official description of the game: 149 increasingly difficult levels, including some hidden, expect chip in this tiled-based puzzle game. Use tools like keys, and special shoes to get around obstacles. Manipulate switches to and use ground blocks to build bridges through navigable routes. Avoid enemy creatures, pick up all computer chips on the level, and run to the S from the area: on top of everything else, there is a time limit! The challenge chip39 - S Challenge is a top-down puzzle game that was first launched in 1989 at Lynx Atari.
