You love your friends and enjoy your knowledge, but their Facebook / Twitter / LinkedIn / MySpace activity is killing your productivity. Here are the two ways, "Sledgehammer" and "Scalpel", we advise you to keep you in the cycle to a minimum, minimizing constant distractions. Photo from tube A` A` E` A`. Before pulling out the large guns, make sure you have taken a nice appearance to the social sites you use and filtering information of the information they offer. Facebook, for example, offers a great "hide" tool you get around on the right side of any update on your main "news feed" page e` a`- "click on it, and you can stop feeling from Suzy TalkstoMuch . Or prevent anyone to have ever told you what race of the Lord of the Rings should have belonged to. Also, these tools will not be new for regular readers with a talent for the web, but they are good in what they do, and worth it Utilities to friends and relatives that you have heard you complain about being overwhelmed. There is no substitute for the strength of will and rationing of time, of course, but we are realistic and we show you how to manage your compulsive time ingrassers: the SLEDGEHAMMER: NutshellMailit may seem against-intuitive to enroll in another web service to further reshape others, but you have no idea what kind of power powershellmail can give you. Solve what we will call the circle of alert e-mail, which does something like that: access social and speed sites read all new things, but it is destroying your free time, and your brain! It's too much. You stop visiting so often, but you want you to get more relevant things from them. Then pass to ... oh, look, send by e-mail! Now you can only get direct messages, answers and posts of relevant friends. Two weeks later ... You are avoiding your e-mail box and decide this too, it's just too much. Get a free account to Nutshellmail. Authorize it to analyze your accounts Facebook, Twitter, MySpace and / or LinkedIn, and it takes all those "John Smith commented on your status" and "Lindsay Jones sent you a direct message" Email that you don't need to see just in This moment and deliveries in a digest every time and anyway you want them. "But my Twitter answers are fundamental for my self-east ... It means, it's a moment's service!" you say. Well - go ahead and schedule Nutshellmail updates to arrive every now and then hours, depending on your dependence. You will still get all the updates for all those you are following, and you won't even have to have hop in twitter.com/tweetdeck/tweetie/whatnot to answer, because Nutshellmail allows you to respond via e-mail links.mail consolidating application Nutshellmail adds a function response to their twitter-by-e-mail e` a`- | Termination Moriform Those who can be realistic on how to be connected, NutshellMail takes the back-to-work obstacle costs of e-mail updates, known as Bacon in some circles and pounds on a flat page of your Kincio-needly to know . It's not spam, it's Bacon. A new deadline is born this week A` e` a`- "Bacon, a course intentionally ... Morethe Scalpel countertops: RSS FilteringMaybe You are not ready to renounce as-as-acago entirely social upgrades. Or maybe even your Nutshellmail round-ups are still full of updates that you are not interested in, from the people you can't unpack, but I don't want to follow. RSS in the Rescue! RSS, in the simpler terms, is a flow of the last titles, posts and Other updates from websites that change frequently. Just like weblogs, most of the main social networks offers RSS feeds of your friends' activity. We drive through the configuration of a feed reader, grasping the feeds from Social sites and then sifting the cruft from them. Which works best will depend on your computer's preferences, but here are some random and non-level programmer options can use: Google Tools: If you are a Gmail user, it's easy enough to add a power reader to the sidebar, which provides one easy look at what is happening without force to click. You could become even more discreet by adding yours It feeds towards the upper scrolling web clips. And if iGoogle is the home page, you can create some boxes that contain all your social chatter. Click on the "Add stuff" link to the far right of your page, then look at the bottom left of the linked page for a "Add feed or gadget" button. Paste in a RSS feed, and you're okay. The Gmail feed reader gadget displays items from any RSS feeds in your incoming mail bar, giving you to read the Morededicated feed reader: if it seems you have a lot of material to cross every day (and, hey, That's why you're reading, right?) You may want to be configured with something a little more powerful than a small widget on a web page. Here is our shortlist: Use feeddemon for a dedicated Windows program, its Sibling NetNewsWire on MACS or read on the web with Google Reader. All those options are quite powerful, offer offline access and make reading through lots of much easier news. Do you want to be online and desktop access to your social feeds and others? Get a copy of the feeddemon beta 3.0 that synchronizes to Google Reader, and you can check your feeds on your computer or anyone else. Now if you're wondering where you grab those feeds, here is the Lowdown: Facebook: Click on the incoming mail after recording in, then click the Notifications tab near the upper part of the central panel. The link to status updates of your friends is on the right. Note, however, the fact that the Facebook feed covers only the status updates. For the entire Firehose, you will need to install a Facebook app as a RSS.Twitter newsfeed: scroll down to the bottom of the bar on the right on Twitter.com, and there is a link to "RSS feeds". Even the names of the individual Twitter also have its own feeds in the same position. Most browsers will also detect these feeds and also put an orange icon in the right edge of the address bar, which you can right-click to copy and log in. LINKEDIN: Scroll down on the page of Main destination on "Network Notifications," and right-click and copy the address from Orange icon.MYSPACE: Unfortunately, only individuals blogs MySpace individual friends have RSS feeds. If you have some friends who update their blogs, though, you can follow their music by links to the top of their blog. So now you have an entire RSS mess that comes your way "What to do with it? Filter them, combine them, send them to make your email and make sure you never need to hear about" what you are? "Results again. Here are the Tools to get the one made: filter: feerdinse is the multi-tool to cut authors, keywords, words, or other. filter my rss is the keyword simpler solution.combine them: if you don't want to get technicians and just want A feed Master of a whole bunch of friends feed, RSS mix and feedcumbine are your best bets. Filter and mixing: Do you want to hit a little more in what makes it through your distraction filter? FeedDemon, mentioned above, it allows you to create "watches" for keywords and tick the objects you don't want to see. In addition to this, there is the Grand Puba of the RSS instruments, Yahoo Pipes. Don't let the graphics or the name Geeky looks like you Scavenger! Yahoo pipes is actually enough To do them, once you learn what is trying to do. Gina walked us through the creation of a "master feed" with tubes that offer some details. If you are more than a visual student, try the Digital Inspiration Walkthrough Video: Those are two effective ways to transform the Firehose of social media updates into a manageable flow, but we also want to hear what you have, then As filters and condensing your social upgrades in the comments. No one enjoys buying life insurance, not to mention the research of which company buy it from. But with the Internet, finding the best life insurance company (especially the one that allows you to quickly apply online) is easier than ever. Like any other financial product, the insurance life industry has become digital. Now you can buy life insurance online, online. The whole process online without ever talking to an individual. As an ancient financial planner who sold life insurance on life the "old-fashion" way, A` e` a`- "I was impressed and amazed how technology continues to push the envelope on efficiency. But since the industry is running online, there are variations in how the process works. For example, some companies are entirely online, while others are online with live assistance. One of the main advantages of an online life insurance company is a simpler application process. You can complete the online application without having to complete multi-page paper applications.
